FOOD PRODUCTION
MAY BE INCREASED

European War Likely to Cause All Nations to Make Greater Efforts In Producing Food and Thus Demand on U. S. Less.

By Justin M'Grath.

I sought an interview with Secretary of Agriculture David Franklin Houston, to ascertain what he thought of the suggestion that since the foodstuffs productions of the warring nations probably would fall off, American farmers might well be urged to increase their production. The thought had occurred to me that it might be wise for the American farmers to grow as big crops as possible during the coming year, not only because they would have a better opportunity than ever before to sell their products abroad, but because of the not improbable contingency that production above the normal home demand might be vitally necessary to the United States. The way I put this latter suggestion to the secretary was: "We have been hearing a lot about our national defenses. What are we doing to improve our food defenses?"

The response of Secretary Houston to both suggestions was illuminating and instructive, and ought to prove of great interest to the country generally.

The secretary is a conservative man. But his conservatism would never be confounded with lack of initiative. It is a conservatism which comes of deep insight into the problems with which he deals. He creates the impression that he is a man who is always in mental motion, but who chooses after deliberation the direction in which his mental energy can be applied with the best assurance of definite and desirable results. He has deep-set eyes and a large brow, which contracts as he talks, indicating a habit of thinking carefully before speaking.

MAY INCREASE FOOD.

"It is a mistake to think that war necessarily means a decrease in agricultural production. In the Balkan countries farm productions increased while the war was waged. The same was true of the northern states during our civil war. There is no good reason to suppose that farm production in the European countries now at war will be lessened during the coming year, even if the war should continue through the summer. On the contrary, it is quite likely that greater attention will be paid, and greater energy applied to agriculture in those countries than during the past year."

"The people of Great Britain, of France, of Germany and Austria," the secretary continued, "are intelligent people. They realize fully and perhaps keenly the importance of an adequate food supply for the successful conduct of the war."

"It is as necessary that the supply should be adequate for the needs of the civilian population as well as for the armies in the field."

NEARLY SELF-SUPPORTING.

"Germany and Austria, of the countries now at war, are nearly self-supporting. Germany has 65,000,000 people. Probably about 6,000,000 are engaged in warfare."

"On account of the conditions with which Germany is confronted, it is reasonable to think that the German people will apply themselves to agriculture during the coming season."

Half Your Living
Without Money Cost

A right or wrong start in 1915 will make or break most farmers in the Cotton States. We are all facing a crisis on cotton. Cotton credit is upset. The supply merchant cannot advance supplies on 1915 cotton. You must do your best to produce on your own acres the food and grain supplies that have made up most of your store debt in the past.

A good piece of garden ground, rightly planted, rightly tended and kept planted the year round, can be made to pay half your living. It will save you more money than you made on the best five acres of cotton you ever grew! But it must be a real garden, and not the mere one-planting patch in the spring and fall.

Hastings' 1915 Seed Book tells all about the right kind of a money-saving garden and the vegetables to put in it. It tells about the field crops as well and shows you the clear road to real farm prosperity, comfort and independence. IT'S FREE. Send for it today to H. G. HASTINGS &amp; CO., Atlanta, Ga.—Adv.

ture during the coming season by planting even to a greater extent than ever before. The same is true of Austria. It may be that with good seasons both these countries will show an increased production of farm products.

"We learn through the Rockefeller foundation that only about 450,000 to 500,000 of the people of Belgium are still in exile from the country. The rest of her millions not engaged in war are back on Belgian soil, and the information we get is that many of them are tilling the soil."

OTHERS INCREASE.

"The representatives from Argentina, India and China, and other wheat-growing countries largely will increase their production. The fall sowing in the United States increased 11.1 per cent, so I do not think there is any need of apprehension that the supply of the world is to fall short during the coming year. And I would not like to take the responsibility of urging the farmers of the United States enormously to increase food production with the assurance that they would find a market for their surplus because of the decreased production in the countries now at war."

"Now as to your second suggestion," said the secretary. "While we should labor to increase productions in all profitable directions the great need in the United States, viewed from the agricultural standpoint, is for a balanced agriculture, a diversified production."

"For instance, the south last year imported from the western states nearly $400,000,000 worth of foodstuffs. This great importation was made necessary by the fact that the south, although a splendid agricultural country, devotes itself almost exclusively to the raising of cotton."

ECONOMICALLY UNSOUND.

"For any section of the country to confine its agricultural efforts to the raising of a single crop is economically unsound. This fact has been borne in on the minds of southern planters through conditions brought about by the war in a more forceful and convincing fashion than they could have been made to realize through argument."

"In the northwest the tendency has been to confine agricultural energy to the raising of wheat. This is just as economically unsound as it is for the south to rely for its support upon cotton. But fortunately for the farmers of the northwest, existing conditions are more favorable for the sale of wheat at a good price than they are for the sale of cotton. Consequently the northwest's great supply of wheat has brought unusual prosperity to that section."

DIVERSIFY CROPS.

"What the department of agriculture is trying to do most is to impress upon the agriculturists of the various sections of the country the necessity of diversifying their crops to such an extent that each section will be self-supporting in any emergency which may arise."

"The department and the land grant colleges, which are its auxiliaries, realize that in the long run the way not only to increase farm products, but also to secure and retain in the United States a sufficient rural population, is to attack the whole rural life problem through its many approaches."

"Until quite recently the thought of the people of the United States principally has been directed toward the upbuilding of cities. Every city in the United States is trying to rival some other city. The principal means of doing this is to build up industry. Consequently the thought of our people has been much more directed toward the development of industry and manufactures than it has been toward the development of agriculture. Until recent years we have been too largely drifting agriculturally."

"The time has come when this policy of neglecting agricultural life must be changed. The prosperity of the country may be said to depend upon the effecting of this change."

"Both this department and the land grant colleges are practicing upon the theory—which has been proved by experience to be correct—that the only way in which agricultural conditions can be largely changed and agricultural production increased is by improving rural life in many directions."

"It cannot be done by merely crying out 'back to the farm.' Nor can it be done by making a few farmers prosperous, for the first use they would make of their prosperity under the existing conditions, in all probability, would be to move to the city. What must be done to keep men and women on the farms is to make the conditions of living surrounding them more nearly approximate those which the people living in cities enjoy, more effectively to organize rural activities."

"And how would you bring about anything like an equality between the country sections and the cities in the respects which you have mentioned?" I asked.

GOOD ROADS.

"Well, one way," said the secretary, "is the construction of more good roads. Where they have good roads the communal life of agriculture sections is improved. Good roads lead to more co-operative endeavors. They lead to better school houses, because where there are good roads more children can come to any one given point and it is then possible to have a large school with good teachers rather than a little school house with a single school teacher."

"Then, too, with good roads it would be possible to have county physicians to do for families in the country just what paid city doctors are now doing for the poorer part of the population in the big cities. Opportunities for entertainment and for social intercourse also would be increased by bringing the people who live in rural communities into close relations. All these things tend to make rural life more attractive and decrease the desire of those living in the country to seek the city. In time the tendency might be the other way."

"Also farmers must be brought together so that they will be able to do their business through agents rather than middlemen. It is along these lines that agricultural prosperity—which means general prosperity—will best be secured in the United States and not through spasmodic efforts exerted to meet unusual conditions."

BECKER LOSES.

The application of Charles Becker, the New York police lieutenant who has been twice convicted of the murder, by conspiracy, of Herman Rosenthal, has been denied by the supreme court.
